Reviews

My family loved the show and my children are still talking about it! The show truly added to our vacation and heightened the kids' interest in history and music!"

Aislynn Denny

“Just incredible! Weaving the music, the dancing, and history all together, I’d have listened and watched for hours! Really impressive how they changed costumes so often!”

Kelly Cothery

“The show was fabulous! It reminded me of Riverdance but was even better in that it told the story of the Scottish heritage through songs, dance, and instrumentation...all superb.”

Nora Elkind-Atkins

History

In 2018, Patrick Mangan, the musical director of Riverdance, and Jennifer Licko, Celtic album of the year songwriter, teamed up to create Highland Echoes. Their goal was to showcase Scottish arts with the same level of energy and excitement that Riverdance brought to Irish arts. The debut show, featuring only four dancers and five musicians, left a crowd of 400+ at the Duke Energy Center Memorial AuditoriumDuke Energy Center for the Performing Arts spellbound.

Since then, Highland Echoes has grown in both size and spirit. Today, the show features 14-25 dancers and original compositions that highlight the power of the Great Highland Bagpipes and the haunting tones of Celtic melodies. The show has received glowing reviews for its captivating performances.

In addition, Jennifer Licko, the Producer, has more than twenty years of experience as a soloist on the school show circuit, where she educated students with Scottish cultural arts programming. This inspired her to offer an educational option for Highland Echoes performances, making it the perfect show for cultural & educational enrichment in addition to pure entertainment.
